The screenshot displays the JSTOR search interface. At the top, the search bar contains the query "(solar power) AND (climate change)". The search results show 4,497 results. The first result is a JOURNAL ARTICLE titled "Can solar power deliver?" by Jenny Nelson and Christopher J. M. Emmott, published in Philosophical Transactions: Mathematical, Physical and Engineering Sciences, Vol. 371, No. 1996, in August 2013. The second result is a BOOK CHAPTER titled "Environment, climate change and solar energy" by Robin Tennant-Wood, published in Following the sun: The pioneering years of solar energy research at The Australian National University 1920-2005 by ANU Press in 2012. The third result is a RESEARCH REPORT titled "Solar Power on the Rise: The Technologies and Policies behind a Booming Energy Sector" by John Rogers and Laura Wisland, published in the Union of Concerned Scientists journal in July 2014. The fourth result is another RESEARCH REPORT titled "Renewable Energy in the Minerals Sector: Assessing Opportunities for Africa" by DANIEL LIMPITLAW.

Music, China, and the West

A Musical-Theoretical Introduction

Hon-Lun Yang

The appropriateness of such phrases as East-West, East meets West, and even China and the West is often challenged. Their use in academic discourse or in the names of institutions and organizations is predicated on a hypothetical dichotomy based on cultural as well as geographical differences.¹ This theoretical construct has long been regarded as binary (i.e., simplistic) and problematic. What is "East" or even China and what is "West" depends largely on the person defining these words, on the purpose(s) for the definitions, and especially on when the distinctions themselves (e.g., national and regional boundaries) were made. Equally questionable is the inherent stereotyping
